The Mint of the United States,

AT

PHILADELPHIA, PENN.,

Assay Department, Oct 21, 1875.

Note for the Superintendent.

After a view of the gold bars just rec'd from Helena, & without waiting for the assay, I beg leave to suggest that the Assayer in charge there, be earnestly requested to toughen his gold, before making payment to his depositors; so that whatever loss may occur thereby, shall fall upon original owners, and not upon this Mint. Of course we have always taken brittle gold, but we charge for the toughening; which we cannot do, in correspondence with an U.S. Office.

The disturbing metals in this case are without doubt very various, & it would add nothing to our experience or satisfaction to eliminate them; they can easily, (best at some cost, & loss,) be worked out, preparatory to coinage.

Note for the Superintendent.

After a view of the gold bars just recd. from Helena, & without waiting for the assay, I beg leave to suggest that the Assayer in charge there, be earnestly requested to toughen his gold, before making payment to his depositors; so that whatever loss may occur thereby, shall fall upon original owners, and not upon this Mint.
